Portfolio note

At the start of the year, international share markets developed very positively. Consequently, the losses of December were already recovered. The best-in-class fund Pictet Small & Mid Caps Switzerland was convincing and developed better than the market as a whole. The item iShares Nasdaq 100 also exhibited strong, above-average performance and was able to regain lost ground. This led to a very positive performance. The neutral equity exposure will be maintained. We remain cautiously optimistic with regard to equities for this year.

Swiss interest rates increased slightly in the beginning of the year but fell back starting in mid-January to their end-of-year 2018 levels. The bond investments being deployed developed slightly positively. Nevertheless, given the low interest rates, we continue to be underweighted in this investment class. The bond funds of emerging countries showed significantly positive performance. Our investments in U.S. corporate bonds developed very pleasingly as well. In January, we sold the item gold producers; this investment achieved a significant profit since its purchase in August, in a difficult environment.
